.Despite being cake, this is a light, moist cake and better for you than the New Year doughnuts! It is often mistaken for a sheet cake and could even be considered a sponge cake.. It is filled with nuts and the usual suspects of raspberry, strawberry, blueberry, lemon, black raspberry and orange.. Homemade bread crumbs with fresh herbs and a lemon zest dust a side. The crumbs are what give this cake its unique taste.. This cake, also called Vienna Cake, is a classic.. If you are in the mood for a major yum, this cake is for you.. It is also called a fruit cake, although this doesn't mean the same as the Christmas variety.. This cake is often served on special occasions such as a birthday, Mother's Day and an anniversary.. In addition to a holiday recipe, this is a great cake to have on hand when the winter blues set in.. In the cake is most likely a liqueur of some sort, because traditionally it is served with a glass of something red. There's also (or were) several kinds of breads, usually made without eggs (and therefore not yeast leavened) that would qualify. For example, panettone (bread for Christmas) is filled with candied fruits and raisins and is meant to be eaten in large chunks. I'm going to have to figure out if there's a distinction between "traditional" and "American" cake (as opposed to, say, a "Western" cake). Most of these are cakes I've had at least once in the US. (I've had a number of others on this list, but I've only had one (bitter-Creamsicle, a recipe which can be found on this list) in the UK.) The American peanut butter pie is a Southern treat made with brown sugar and molasses. But one of the most distinctive American pies is the apple pie. And one of the most distinctive kinds of apple pie is the low country peach or apple pie. And a final note: there are some cakes that can be found in other countries. The lady cake is a British cake, and the traditional Russian Easter cake is, as an American friend pointed out to me, a genuine American cake. In fact, it's sometimes claimed that, aside from America, there's only one other country in the world which can make such a cake: England. This is the 82157476af
